

Google Penguin Recovery Tips
Posted by TheDrifter - 2012/08/29 16:17

I've seen many sites get drawn down to their search engine positions many webmasters are panicking and don't know what to do since the recent Google penguin algorithm had been rolled out. I'd also like to know how to coup up with this changes and what are the most common remedy?:

Again, this Month another algorithm has been rolled out by Google and seems that it's a big one and most of my clients are trouble with the change some sites had dropped in ranking dramatically. Has anyone here already seen the effect? and can somebody tell me what the new algorithm called? From the looks of it it's really a big change like the panda and penguin surely theirs a name for it...silly:

If your going to start a site now then definitely it's going to be much harder and tougher than it was in the previous years. But if you have a site that's been with you built prior to the new penguin 2.0 and been continuing to work with it to gain popularity prior to the latest change then it's much easier. As long as it's built for good purpose and not just for SEO and Monetization then you won't have to do much work as the latest penguin update is targeting spam sites from being able to reach on the top search query.:ohmy:

It seems like creating newer sites nowadays is harder to rank on search engines plus to much burden and hard-work for me. The working force is doubled maybe tripled. SEO world is getting smaller and smaller Everyday...LOL:laugh:. Social media is not an option for me I'm just a one man team I need an alternative:unsure: :S

With all those new updates I don't know what to follow anymore it only confuses everything I've seen sites that don't follow rules but still rank well and some that follow the rules not doing well I guess luck still plays a vital role in the world of SEO bots are still bots after all they can't always be precise and pick the right sites to rank well on Search Engines. You've done the right thing on not following any SEO rituals or methods it's just a waste of time. Instead of doing SEO I think it's best to work within your site instead of outside your site.
